New poll in NYC mayor's race has Zohran Mamdani with commanding lead in just about every scenario

Story by Jesse Zanger • 2h • 2 min read

A new poll in the race for New York City mayor shows Queens Assemblyman Zohran Mamdani with a commanding lead in just about every scenario in this year's unprecedented race.

The AARP New York-Gotham Polling & Analytics poll surveyed 1,376 likely voters, and found Mamdani well ahead of his nearest challengers with 41.8% support.

The same poll had:

- Former Gov. Andrew Cuomo, who's running as an independent, with 23.4% support
- Republican nominee and Guardian Angels founder Curtis Sliwa with 16.5% support
- Incumbent Mayor Eric Adams, who is seeking re-election as an independent, with 8.8% support

- 7.9% were undecided
- 1.6% supported other candidates

The poll also asked likely voters what would happen if some of the contenders were to drop out. In every scenario, Mamdani maintained his comfortable lead in the race.

- If Cuomo drops out, Mamdani rises to 48.4% support, ahead of Sliwa by 27.6 points (48.4%-20.8%)
- If Adams drops out, Mamdani leads Cuomo by 14 points,
